GUIDE TO
THE PARISH CHURCH OF STRATFORD-ON-AVON.

The Charge for Admission to the Church is 6d. each.

There is no other Fee, and a copy of this short description is given to each Visitor.

The Church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and probably occupies the site of a more ancient building. It is Cruciform, with Central Tower and Spire, and Aisles to the Nave only, and is 192 feet long. The oldest parts are the Transepts and part of the Central Tower, which date from the beginning of the 13th century. The Aisles were added in the 14th century. The North Aisle was begun first, but both were carried on together, and very slowly, as the variety in the windows shows. The rest of the Church is the work of the 15th century, to which both the Chancel and Porch belong. The present stone Spire was erected in place of an old wooden one in the 18th century, and an old Vestry to the north of the Chancel, which it is now proposed to rebuild, was taken down about the same time.

As you enter, the Font, which replaced an old one about 50 years ago, faces you. Standing by it, and looking Eastward, you will see how remarkably the Chancel inclines to the North. Various fanciful reasons are given for this, but it is probably only the result of being built at different times. The beautiful way in which the Clerestory has been added on the arches below deserves attention. The West Window represents the Twelve Apostles, and in the centre the Baptism of Our Lord. On the outside are three niches for statues, which have unfortunately been removed.

Proceeding Eastward, notice, at the East end of the North Aisle, the Clopton Chapel, once dedicated to Our Lady, but now filled with Tombs of the Clopton Family. In the window above it, is the only ancient glass in the Church. At the East end of the South Aisle are three Sedilia, or Priest's seats, the only remains of the ancient Chapel of S. Thomas a 'Beckett.

Before you enter the Chancel you will observe that the North T[illegible]pt is blocked by the Organ, and the South partially taken up by the Vestry. It is intended to remove both of these, when sufficient funds have been obtained to rebuild the old Vestry. The old screen is that which now encloses the Vestry, but the present one was across the North Transept before being placed where it is now. The Chancel is 65ft. long, 25ft. wide, and 42ft. high. The stalls probably had backs originally. The carvings under some of the seats—or Misereres—are worth noticing. The glass in the
